The Republic of Sudan is the third largest country on the African continent (1,861,484 km² or 718,723 mi²). Its population is around 34,850,000. Located in Northeast Africa, Sudan shares borders with > Egypt, > Eritrea, > Ethiopia, ► South Sudan, ► Central African Republic, ► Chad, and ► Libya (Figure 1). Its 18 states are home to about 580 ethnic groups who speak hundreds of different languages and dialects (Hale 2009). Arabic and English are the official languages, while Bedawi, Fur, and Nubian are widely spoken as well. In the 2000s, oil production became the largest industry. Sudan's GDP rose to US$58,769 million in 2012. About 3.1 % of Sudan's economy was generated by its tourism ▶ industry (WTTC 2014).

Between 1995 and 2013, the number of international tourists grew from 29,000 to 591,000. Traveling (TWB 2015) along the river Nile on a nature reserves as veritable bids to bolster ≥ suscruise boat, rafting, kayaking, and jungle and tainable tourism. savanna trekking are among the most popular activities (Cooper 2009). The National Museum in Khartoum, the Dinder National Park, the volcanic highlands of Jebel Marra, and the Red Sea Coast are regularly frequented by tourists (Boniface et al. 2012). The variety of attractions is complemented by archaeological sites, such as the pyramids of Meroe, the Karmah tombs, and the temple of Sdeinga. About 80,000 employees ▶ work in tourism, constituting only 1.3 % of the total Sudanese workforce (UNEC 2013). Despite substantial investment, Sudan lacks a solid infrastructure in comparison with most of its neighboring countries. As a result, the Ministry of Tourism and Wildlife has pursued a strategy of development that primarily envisages bolstering the protection of wildlife and developing further national nature reserves. In 2010, the Sudan International University founded the Faculty of Tourism and Hotels to offer education in this field. Graduates bring accounting and management skills to the industry.

Tourism > development has been negatively affected by the long-standing conflict in Sudan, and the country remains one of the lesser visited destinations in > Africa. Recent investments have, however, boosted the tourism industry. Very little research has been carried out to understand tourism in Sudan. Future contributions can examine how archaeological heritages are constructed as major tourism products and assess
